Let's pretend it's the morning.

Unless it IS the morning.

GOOD morning...these are some exercises to get you saying things like...Oh for fuck's sake!!...And...Leave me alone!!!...

...And then yes...yes!!...YES!!!!

Propositions Too Out There

2 questions that prove rhetorically effective where a valid conspiracy theory faces ridicule:

The skeptic scorns: 'the character of the claim is absurd', but I say 'well...

208525...?

...and if so...

231521124
208525...?'

...TNAR

I venture this is the case - being faithful to the essential logical nature of the concept - in alignment with its use.

The literal sense of 'right' is 'correct'.

It has a blasé customary usage in ethics.

'Incorrect' does not readily translate over to ethics (leaving aside social conventions), but 'wrong' lays claim to a moral status with a kind of deontological assuredness.

A verdict of 'wrong', if meaningfully purported, is not open to inquiry/ investigation.

Or, if you believe in 'the right thing' - everything else is wrong.

'The wrong thing to do' could appropriately be applied - if there were just two options and one of them was clearly the better option, but this is not really moral freedom is it? Here's a choice!!!!! Don't get it wrong.
